CHENAVARI expands risk management and technology capabilities with senior hire out of London office

CHENAVARI Investment Managers (www.chenavari.com) is pleased to announce that Eric Lepage has joined its London office earlier this month, as Chief Risk Officer (CRO) and Chief Technology Officer (CTO). Eric Lepage will have responsibilities over the Risk, Quantitative Research and Systems Development teams within the group.

Eric Lepage has over 20 years international work experience in both Capital Market information technology and senior trading positions. After a start in option market marking at Société Generale in 1993, Eric Lepage moved to Murex where he spent 4 years as a key developer of the MxRates platform and 1 year in New York city as a senior Murex consultant. In 1997 Eric left Murex and worked 4 years at Société Générale in Paris as co-Head of European Credit Derivatives Trading. Eric Lepage then became Global Head of Exotic Credit Trading and Head of European Credit Structuring at BNP Paribas in London. In May 2005 Eric joined Calyon in London to become Global Head of Flow & Exotics Credit Trading & Quantitative Research. In September 2007 Eric moved to BlueCrest where he co-founded a Multi Strategy Credit hedge fund. He worked with BlueCrest until August 2009 when he decided to create a Capital Market risk management start-up firm (Hemera Finance Concept) focused on quantitative analysis and advanced IT architecture. Eric graduated from Ecole Nationale Supérieure des Mines de Paris.

Loïc FERY, CEO and Co-CIO of Chenavari Investment Managers, said: “Eric Lepage brings to Chenavari his extensive experience in credit trading, quantitative research and capital market systems development. We believe that his recruitment will enable Chenavari Investment Managers to keep on improving our sophisticated integrated risk management systems and further enhance our ability to deliver consistent returns to investors”.
